

Derelict to Productive – No 7 - A Practical guide – Livestock considerations

There are many considerations when considering what species of livestock you will introduce to your croft. Having decided what species and breed there are a number of ways to acquire your new stock.

In this guide we will take a brief look at your main considerations.

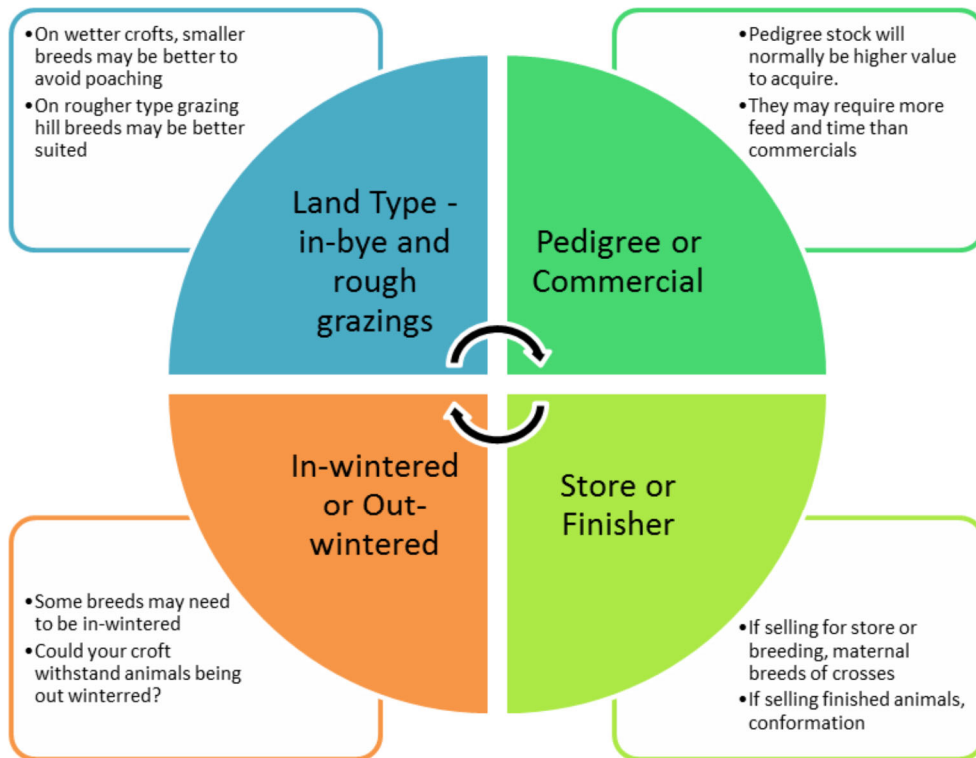

What Species?

- Do you have experience in keeping any species of animal and if not do you have help nearby?
- All livestock will need to be handled, do you have or can you get access to handling facilities?
- If livestock need to be housed, can you access shed space or are you prepared to invest?
- Is there a market demand for the species you want to keep and then sell?
- Is there suitable infrastructure on your croft? For example if you were to farm deer, you would require deer fencing.
- Do you have capital to purchase the species you want? For example, cattle would require a far higher level of capital than sheep

Derelict to Productive – No 7 - A Practical guide – Livestock considerations

What Breed?

Where to buy and Sell?

